Why do we sleep? One thing we do know is that it's good for our physical and mental health. Physically, sleep helps prevent sickness and keeps our bodies healthy. Mentally, we study and work better when we sleep for about eight hours the previous night.

In this century, lack of sleep is becoming a big problem. The average American sleeps less than seven hours a night – that's two hours less than a century ago. Our modern 24-hour-a-day lifestyle means that more and more of us are working at different times of the day – and night. We often stay up late into the night, and some of us even work all night and sleep during the day. This is a problem because our body's natural clock is connected with the movement of the sun. If we don't sleep at night for long periods, it can be bad for our health.

But perhaps the biggest problem comes from electric lights and screens. Modern cities use bright LED lights throughout the night, which changes the way we sleep. In addition, the screen of a computer, a tablet, or a smartphone sends out blue light. And the bluer and brighter it is, the more difficult it is to get tired and go to sleep.

As a result, some medical experts suggest that we shouldn't watch more than two hours of television per day and that we should stop looking at screens (including phones) one hour before we go to bed. But how many of us will take this advice?

Generation gap is a popular term used to describe the wide differences between members of the younger generation and their older counterparts. A generation gap exists when older and younger people don't understand each other because of their experiences, opinions, habits, behaviour and life conditions. A generation gap can exist between two or even three generations in a family, between mature and immature generations. [I]

Firstly, there are some different opinions between parents and children about their careers, education and love. People in the old society always thought they should do everything for their children, from primary school to work, and then find a wife or husband for their children. [II] There are many things children want, but their parents think are unnecessary. That causes misunderstanding and sets the stage for conflicts.

Secondly, the young generation thinks differently from the old generation. They can be affected by many new fashion trends. Life is more modern now. Therefore, fashion, like recreation, entertainment, clothes, and hairstyle, has to be changed to become more suitable for a busy life. The young generation likes listening to pop, rock, and hip-hop. [III]

Next, the older generation has more experience than the younger: they know what is right and what is wrong, but the younger will comment and deny everything without any experience. [IV] In some cases, the young generation makes foolish mistakes because of a lack of experience.

In short, parents seldom listen to their children, and children always think parents are so strict and conservative. To shorten these distances or to clear up this big barrier, parents and children should sit together and talk or discuss like friends. The young generation can learn from the old ones, and the old generation needs to refresh their minds to embrace the new lifestyle.
