My school organizes a number of volunteer activities every summer. The activities include collecting old clothes for poor children, cleaning the streets in our town, planting trees in the schoolyard, visiting elderly people in nursing homes, and preparing meals for homeless people.

Our school started this programme about six years ago. Every student is encouraged to join at least one activity, but many of us choose two or three. At first, we discussed why we should take part in these activities and how they could benefit the community. After that, we decided what we wanted to do. Those who enjoy working with children could help teach games or tell stories to them. Those who are strong and active often chose to plant trees or clean the streets. Finally, we registered for the activities we preferred, and the teachers helped us make a plan. During the programme, our teachers always remind us to work hard and cooperate with others.
