Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

By 2025, the number of internet users and phone users will rise to double the number today. The experts also suggest that other devices such as smartwatches and smart wearable will be sold as much as mobile phones. Technology has become so popular that the industry experts also anticipate that every consumer will own two mobile phones or more in the future.

Many concepts are introduced in the glimpse of how mobile phones might take their future developments. Many features that have been put out are holographic displays, flexible frames, educational tools, and most importantly, eco-friendly smartphones. All of these are related to mobile technology but they have not been accomplished to the last level. People expect some of the better versions from these kinds of features that come along with each mobile phone. Another topic can be the design of a mobile phone as it is always similar for almost all phones. We have rectangular mobile phones today. We can also expect them to come along in different shapes and sizes which are unusual today. In the future, we can expect more variety in design as well as the features inside each mobile phone.

The smartphone is a companion device that is inspired by human behaviour. It is designed to help the users connect with their mobile phones physically as well as emotionally. You can seriously notice how your mood changes when you have a good mobile phone and when your mobile phone is not working. There are many cool features that come along with many mobile phones such as the camera or some simple features such as setting reminders or alarms. Having multiple devices to help you is eliminated by having one mobile phone.

FALSE (Mrs. Johnson comes every Tuesday, not on weekends)

TRUE (Volunteers "pick up trash in their neighborhood")

FALSE (The homework club was created by teenagers)

FALSE (The speaker says "we don't need to wait for big organizations to help us")

Transcript:

Welcome to our podcast about community action! Today we're talking about grassroots initiatives.

In Green Valley, local people started a community garden. Before, this was just an empty lot. Now, it grows fresh vegetables for everyone. Mrs. Johnson, who is 72 years old, says: "I come here every Tuesday. I meet my neighbors and we grow healthy food together." Another great example is the "Clean Streets" project in Riverside. Every month, volunteers pick up trash in their neighborhood. They also planted trees along the main road. Now the air is cleaner, and the streets look beautiful. In Westside, teenagers created a homework club at the community center. Older students help younger ones with math and reading. Maria, who is 16, says: "We didn't have much help with school before. Now our grades are better, and we make new friends too." These small actions show that we don't need to wait for big organizations to help us. When people work together, they can make their communities better places to live.

What could you do to improve your community?

Transcript:

Sarah: Hi Tom! I heard you're working on a school project about inventions.

Tom: Yes, that's right. I'm looking at how people solve everyday problems with new ideas.

Sarah: That sounds interesting! Can you give me an example?

Tom: Well, do you remember how difficult it was to carry all our water bottles to sports practice?

Sarah: Oh yes! They were always falling out of our bags or leaking.

Tom: Exactly! So I designed a special bottle holder that attaches to our backpacks.

Sarah: That's clever! How did you come up with that idea?

Tom: First, I identified the problem—water bottles are hard to carry. Then I thought about possible solutions.

Sarah: Did you try different designs?

Tom: Yes, my first design didn't work well. The bottles still fell out when we ran.

Sarah: So what did you do next?

Tom: I changed the design. I added a secure strap and made it from stronger material.

Sarah: Did you test it again?

Tom: Yes! I asked five friends to use it during practice. They all said it worked much better.

Sarah: That's how real inventors work, right? They test their ideas and improve them.

Tom: Exactly! My teacher calls it the "innovation journey"—you find a problem, create a solution, test it, and make it better.

Sarah: I think that's really cool. Do you have any other invention ideas?

Tom: I'm now working on a homework reminder app. Many students forget their assignments.

Sarah: That would be so useful! I always forget my math homework.

Tom: See? That's how innovation works—we notice problems around us and try to solve them!

Sarah: You've inspired me! Maybe I'll try to invent something too.

Tom: You should! Everyone can be an inventor if they pay attention to problems that need solutions.
