Nobody can deny that technology development has done a lot to make our lives much better. However, there are some questions that worry us: will technology replace us in personal communication?

What if humans no longer feel the need to communicate in person?

Nowadays, with just one click, we can communicate with anyone, from anywhere through emails, video calls, messages, and other social media. It's quick and convenient. No trouble for dressing up or travelling for a personal meeting. We might become addicted to having conversations online instead of in person.

What if emojis become the only way we express our emotions?

There are various emojis that we can now use with an email or message to express our different emotions: a smiley or crying face, a winked eye, or an o-shaped mouth. The emojis are still increasing in number. We might no longer need facial expressions because the emojis do it for us, and the person in the chat box gets it from us.

The future is perhaps for our generation to decide.

28. We are worried that technology will _____ humans in personal communication.
