Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

A baby born today will live for how long? 100 years? 120 years? Genes that could make us all live longer are being studied by scientists.

100 years old is already an important milestone for a huge number of people. They are called "wellderly" because there are so many healthy older people. Not having a big sickness like high blood pressure, heart disease, or diabetes makes this group of people over 80 years old. In places where good old age is common, there are a lot of research studies. The island of Okinawa in Japan and Calabria in the south of Italy are two examples. About 2,000 people are living in the small village of Molochio in Calabria. Plus, at least eight of them are over 100 years old. "I eat a lot of fruit and vegetables" is the answer that experts always get from people like this when they are asked how they stay so healthy and young. "Something from every food group." "I don't drink or smoke."

Today, experts are also looking at genes to try to figure out why some people live so long. In the past, they only looked at things like food and lifestyle. Eric Topol, a researcher, says that we must have genes that keep us from getting old. People who share a DNA link were looked at in the new study on living a long time. Living in Ecuador is a cool group. There are several people in one part of the country who all have the same genetic situation. Laron disease is the name for it. Not very tall—just over a meter—these guys get. They are also less likely to get cancer and diabetes because they have Laron syndrome. Their family members live shorter lives because of this. Additionally, there is a group of long-living Japanese-American guys on the Hawaiian island of Oahu. In the Laron syndrome group, they share a gene.

The family trees of the 100-year-old people were made by researchers back in Calabria. Family records from the 1800s to the present day were looked at. To sum up, DNA factors that are good for men's health have been found. Most of the time, women in Europe live longer than men, so this finding is strange. Why do some people live longer? Probably a third factor—luck—comes into play along with genes and the surroundings.
